BALTIMORE SCHOOL FOR THE ARTS THEATER TEACHER AND ACTRESS RELEASES CHILDREN'S BOOK ABOUT HEALING THE BULLY

Maria Broom's The Village Bully aims to curb bullying through circles of love

Baltimore, Md. - (January 12, 2015) - The Babemba tribe of Africa believes each human being comes into the world as good. When a person acts irresponsibly or unjustly, he/she is placed in the center of the village circle. Work ceases as everyone gathers around the accused. One at a time, each member of the village, tells every good thing they can remember about this person...every incident and experience that can be recalled with accuracy. All of his positive attributes, strengths and kindnesses are recited carefully and at length. The ceremony may last several days and ends in celebration. Now the person can remember himself.

Inspired by this old African ritual, Baltimore School for the Arts theater teacher and notable actress Maria Broom penned The Village Bully, a story/poem that tells of young Michael Jose Jamal and his classmates, and how they learned from their teacher to create a 'circle of love' to help the boy let go of his bullying ways.

"The Village Bully is a way to introduce another culture's loving and healing tradition to this society's youngest citizens," said Maria. "Teachers, counselors and parents are constantly looking for ways to help children create a world of love and kindness, and this effort offers them an opportunity to reduce damaging angry behavior."

Exquisitely illustrated by California artist John Malloy, The Village Bully introduces a simple practice specifically designed for classrooms and group settings. With this in mind, Maria has launched The Village Bully Project in which she is gifting a copy of the book to every first, second, third and fourth grade teacher who wants to share this practice with their students.

"The project's goals are to help curb bullying and poor behavior, to stimulate innate habits of forgiveness and compassion in children, and to introduce the power behind the circles of love," said Maria. "This is truly something I believe everyone can relate to, and these circles can become a powerful tool for all."

Published by Otter Bay Books, The Village Bully is available for $15 and can be purchased by visiting <http://mariabroom.com/village-bully>. Support for The Village Bully Project comes from Suzanne Pratt of the Laurene Straughn Pratt Foundation, the Community Conferencing Center, Markim Multimedia Group, The Baltimore Homa Community and PW Feats, Inc.
